Short summary of idea*

Allow end dates to be extended in announcements after publish

Application/Area

Description

We have a policy that users need to accept as they log into the platform for the first time, so we need to extend the publish end date years in advance, even after the policy has been published. This way, even after a new user has been added, since they are part of the target users, they will need to accept.

I'm proposing that the end dates of announcements that require acknowledgement/need to be accepted (rather than dismissed) have the ability to edit the publish end date. This won't affect the content of the message itself so the integrity of the initial acceptance will still be maintained.
